The first book-length empirical investigation of writing center directors' labor, The Working Lives of New Writing Center Directors presents a longitudinal qualitative study of the individual professional lives of nine new directors. Inspired by Kinkead and Harris's Writing Centers in Context (1993), the authors adopt a case study approach to examine the labor these directors performed and the varied motivations for their labor, as well as the labor they ignored, deferred, or sidelined temporarily, whether or not they wanted to. The study shows directors engaged in various types of labor—everyday, disciplinary, and emotional—and reveals that labor is never restricted to a list of job responsibilities, although those play a role. Instead, labor is motivated and shaped by complex and unique combinations of requirements, expectations, values, perceived strengths, interests and desires, identities, and knowledge. The cases collectively distill how different institutions define writing and appropriate resources to writing instruction and support, informing the ongoing wider cultural debates about skills (writing and otherwise), the preparation of educators, the renewal/tenuring of educators, and administrative “bloat” in academe. The nine new directors discuss more than just their labor; they address their motivations, their sense of self, and their own thoughts about the work they do, facets of writing center director labor that other types of research or scholarship have up to now left invisible. The Working Lives of New Writing Center Directors strikes a new path in scholarship on writing center administration and is essential reading for present and future writing center administrators and those who mentor them.

"Peace, woman. I swear, you have no sense of humor whatsoever. I'll accept your deal on one condition." I wait for him to continue but he doesn't say anything else. It's like pulling teeth. "What's the condition?" "You have to go on a date with me." "You realize that you're blackmailing me into a date, don't you? That's desperate, even for you," I say in disgust. "Don't you have any shame?" "Yes, I realize that. And no, I do not. The Greeks wouldn't have won the Trojan war if they had felt too ashamed to hide in a wooden horse," he quotes cheerfully. "So you're comparing going on a date with me to winning a war?" "Hm...Yeah, I guess I am," he answers, completely unfazed. "Take it or leave it, it's up to you." I take a deep breath and try to think about this rationally. One date in return for a chance at winning the Championship. xxxxxxBlue Smith has leukemia. Having already undergone several cycles of chemotherapy, she isn't sure how much time she has left. All she knows is that she'll do anything to live. Just when she's lost all hope she is transported to Vitalis, a mysterious planet that may hold the cure. But to obtain that cure, she and her team have to win the Salvage Championship by completing a set of perilous Tasks. Tasks that test their strength and acumen. When Blue finds herself allied with an innocent ten-year-old, a gorgeous but abrasive blonde, an annoyingly arrogant cynic, and a handsome jock who is way too laid-back, she wonders if her team can even pass the qualifying round. As she struggles to keep her team from being eliminated, she starts to notice some strange things on Vitalis. It's sunny all the time and the people are a bit...off. Although she is more than happy to ignore the weirdness of the planet, Jack (her teammate) won't let her. He insists the Vitalians are hiding something from them. Having no other choice, Blue reluctantly joins Jack in his quest to uncover Vitalis' secrets. And while fighting for her life, she starts to fall for the one person she thought she'd never trust. Bible of the Gun is a collection of stories, from the novel of the title, to the novella of Bathory and the State, to the long shorts of The Destructive Urge and The Rose of John Hamlet. The stories have several things in common. The first of these is brevity; none of the stories have anything that is inessential, not a single line that the author did not enjoy writing that was not a curiosity or a puzzle to be solved. The second is surrealism. All the stories are surrealist in one sense or another, all steal something from dreams, and all try to unlock something of the animal from the Id. The author aligns himself with Bizarro, because the work clearly is, however, it is also seriously surrealist. Thirdly, violence in all the authors work is never treated morally, but let loose, you dont have to read the stories from the point of view of a good person being shown bad things, which fascinate, and yet you are never allowed to be a part of, but just as if you were in a dream or were a child, you have no moral compass and are lead into violence without condemnation, are told to identify with it, even when its source is apparently evil. To go back to surrealism before we discuss the actual stories. I, the author, am a surrealist anarchist, and a surrealist creator, for three reasons. One is a fascination with dreams, their strangeness and wonder, where they come from, their unrestrained adventures. Two is a political interest, from the point of view that the super ego, the restraints of the opinions of society, therefore, the opinions of the state through all aspects of media and coercion, is a cowardly internalised source that restricts our freedom and makes everyone slaves. Thirdly, is an attempt to unpeel this onion even further, let out the Id, the creativity, the desires, without the restraints of ego and super ego, to see the core of who we are, even if this is bad, I want to find good, but I do not want to find it at the bottom of being afraid because I do not want to consent to the pressures of every one and thing I despise, even if I am instead lead to evil that I despise more, and yet I find as a child, or in a dream, I am rarely lead to evil through lack of social inhibitions, in my work, I often am., but then, I have had a very violent life. Most of these stories however are rather more restrained than the earlier works of Unrequited Zombie and Urban Book of the Dead, except for The Destructive Urge, also the most surreal here and the most recent. Bathory and the State is from an earlier period, and a little primitive, which only means it is eighteen months old. Bible of the Gun is a story about a man, who after strange events of a dream like and schizophrenic nature, goes to see a female psychiatrist. I was lying on the leather couch, so much like a dental chair, the smell of leather had a clinical effect on the memories she extracted, as the sense of smell alerted me to smells from the past. Light fell on the couches black leather in shiny checks from the window light as the warm rays that read my mind with their heat signatures fell on us, they made the plant on the coffee table, with its lush green leaves, burble to me happily in a language I could not understand. Like pulling teeth she grasped each memory, examined it through her glasses leaning forward, she tapped each one with her pen looking for rottenness, tore it painfully from its protective flesh. Her mobile phone sat on the coffee table. Dismantled at my request, slim, orange and black, a Sonny Ericsson 880i, it had its spying guts removed. That is; its battery lay at its side so that the secret services or who ever they were could not pick up through its microphone, my conversation with my psychiatrist. My psychiatrist sat in a swiveling chair; I looked down at her red shoes, the sharp heels pointing from one side and then the other as she turned the chair from side to side with her long legs, occasionally

In the classroom, knowledge is widely distributed among the students and teacher, but is difficult to share across linguistic and cultural barriers. Seeking paths across these barriers, Lynne Wiltse meticulously explores the question: What is the discourse frame in which students and teachers work? Situated in a grade nine multilingual classroom, her work provides a rich description of the research process in the classroom. At the same time, she draws the reader sequentially through the analysis, revealing inferences in increasing levels of abstraction within a framework of "communities of practice." She highlights issues related to second language acquisition, students' immigration experiences, teaching, and learning, and points the way toward multi-vocal dialogues and practices that can forge a path across cultural and linguistic divides.

Are you looking for a series of bedtime meditation stories? Then keep reading.... So many of us are familiar with the nightly battle that bedtime can be. Fighting with your child to get them to go to sleep can be traumatic and exhausting for both the child and the parents. Because of this, bedtime gets pushed to later and later in the evening, no one in the house is getting the peace or the sleep they need, and before you know it, someone is saying things they don't really mean. Enforcing a bedtime when the child doesn't want to go to bed can be like pulling teeth and it's not pleasant for anyone involved. So why is it that kids seem to reluctant to get to sleep? We'll cover more of the reasons for this in the following chapter, but in short, they're not tired yet. They're still wound up, and they obviously want to stay awake for a reason, right? They wouldn't care about staying up if they felt tired, if they felt like sleep would help, and if they weren't interested in the things that are going on in the house around them. The theory behind the methods and processes laid out in this book is to fully prepare the child for bed so they're not fighting the idea of falling asleep by the time they should be lying down, closing their eyes, and drifting off. One of the methods that we'll be exploring more heavily in this book is that of sleep meditation. It's something that is best done between parent and child to make bedtime a team effort and we'll cover the specifics below. Bedtime Meditations for Kids - Vol. 3 features: 25 stories written to catch your kid's attention and promote detachment from everyday problems Important techniques to help your children relax and fall asleep Short and easily understandable contents This book is perfect for achieving the following goals: Learn deep sleep meditation Convey a sense of tranquillity and security Relieve stress and anxiety Help your child to overcome his fears Guided sleep meditation is a very effective method that allows you to let go of the events and feelings of the day that may be sticking with you. The goal of sleep meditation is to bring the body and mind to a state of calm that allows for a restful and recuperative sleep to take place. Are your kids ready for this type of meditation and get a decent sleep every night? I know, that is why I've put my time and effort to create this book in order to share it especially for you. Whenever a memoirist gives a reading, someone in the audience is sure to ask: How did your family react? Revisiting our pasts and exploring our experiences, we often reveal more of our nearest and dearest than they might prefer. This volume navigates the emotional and literary minefields that any writer of family stories or secrets must travel when depicting private lives for public consumption. Essays by twenty-five memoirists, including Faith Adiele, Alison Bechdel, Jill Christman, Judith Ortiz Cofer, Rigoberto González, Robin Hemley, Dinty W. Moore, Bich Minh Nguyen, and Mimi Schwartz, explore the fraught territory of family history told from one perspective, which, from another angle in the family drama, might appear quite different indeed. In her introduction to this book, Joy Castro, herself a memoirist, explores the ethical dilemmas of writing about family and offers practical strategies for this tricky but necessary subject. A sustained and eminently readable lesson in the craft of memoir, Family Trouble serves as a practical guide for writers to find their own version of the truth while still respecting family boundaries.

Written by a Sydney native, English, The Aussie Way: A Fun Guide to Australia's Colourful Phrases, Words, and Expressions offers an amusing way for English or non-English speakers around the world to learn the colloquial phrases for which Australia is famous. This user-friendly reference provides words/phrases and meanings/synonyms by using an example sentence. Says the author, "For seven years I housed international students who were attending English language schools in Sydney, and I realised that although they had a good grasp of formal grammar, they struggled to understand not only colloquial English, but many of the commonly used phrasal verbs, which could not be found in a standard English/Spanish, French, etc., dictionary. It was then that I decided to start writing some of them down for future reference and it grew from there."

This book uses Viktor Frankl's Existential Psychology (logotherapy) to explore the ways some professors use unusually personal scholarship to discover meaning in personal adversity. A psychiatrist imprisoned for three years in Nazi concentration camps, Frankl believed the search for meaning is a powerful motivator, and that its discovery can be profoundly therapeutic. Part I begins with four stories of professors finding meaning. Using the case studies as a foundation, Part II investigates issues of epistemology and ethics in unusually personal research from an existential perspective. The book offers advice for graduate students and faculty who want to live and work more meaningfully in the academy.

WPAs in Transition shares a wide variety of professional and personal perspectives about the costs, benefits, struggles, and triumphs experienced by writing program administrators making transitions into and out of leadership positions. Contributors to the volume come from various positions, as writing center directors, assistant writing program administrators, and WPAs; mixed settings, including community colleges, small liberal arts colleges, and research institutions; and a range of career stages, from early to retiring. They recount insightful anecdotes and provide a scholarly context in which WPAs can share experiences related to this long-ignored aspect of their work. During such transitions, WPAs and other leaders who function as both administrators and faculty face the professional and personal challenges of redefining who they are, the work they do, and with whom they collaborate. WPAs in Transition creates a grounded and nuanced experiential understanding of what it means to navigate changing roles, advancing the dialogue around WPAs' and other administrators' identities, career paths, work-life balance, and location, and is a meaningful addition to the broader literature on administration and leadership. The information in this book all boils down to the key elements of meeting and attracting men, the courtship process, and setting yourself up for a successful long-term relationship with a man. Psychologists, social scientists, writers, thinkers, etc. tend to focus on the "later stages" of love when people have found each other or are already married. Maybe it's because they're in a lab all day, but I don't think they understand that relationships don't just happen and come together in a test tube. There's a whole universe of stuff that happens before two people arrive at a committed relationship, but these earlier stages and processes don't get much attention. For lots of women, just finding a great guy can be tough enough. First she has to find him and meet him. Then she has to attract him and be attracted to him. Then she has to get to know him and make sure he isn't some player or whatever. Then she has to figure out how to keep the chemistry alive and stay connected and intimate. (This last one can be like pulling teeth with some men!). It's an incredible process that can be overwhelming for lots of women. So why does it have to be so hard with men? Why do ALL of these things have to fall into place with men before any of the deeper feelings and longer term commitments come into play?... Well, that's what we're here to talk about.
